This study explores the association between parental drinking, health status and health-related quality of life among a community sample of adolescents (N = 722). The data are from a cross-sectional survey of 13- and 14-year-olds in New Zealand, using a self-administered questionnaire. Health status was measured using the World Health Organization Well-Being Index, and parental drinking measured using the Alcohol Use Disorders Identification Test. Despite a strong association between parental drinking and the adolescents' own alcohol use, parental drinking was not significantly associated with their health-related quality of life.Plasma electrolytes, aldosterone, and renal blood flow in patients with arterial hypertension before and after pharmacologic treatment.
